Herbert Smith Freehills' Employment team has published their annual guide to Australia's employment and workplace relations laws, and to recognise the nearly 15 years since the firm commenced publication, they look back at the major topics.

A DECADE IN REVIEW - KEY CHANGES IN THE INDUSTRY

Reflecting on the last decade, the Employment, Pensions & Incentives Group have seen enormous changes in terms of the complexity and proliferation of Australian employment laws.

There has been a new surge of focus on the often complex interaction of domestic and international laws and contractual arrangements pertaining to international movement of staff.

This has included the harmonisation of much of the law relating to employment and work health and safety, and the industry has also seen increased regulation surrounding the hiring and remuneration of listed company officers.

THE GUIDE TO EMPLOYMENT & WORKPLACE RELATIONS IN AUSTRALIA 2017

The Employment and Workplace Relations in Australia Guide 2017 (Guide) offers in-house counsel, HR, IR and safety professionals with a comprehensive, straightforward and up-to-date overview of all areas of employment, industrial and safety laws, both federal and state. The Guide is also a valuable resource for executives and managers who need or want to learn more about the law and other arrangements underpinning the employment of their people.

An extract of the Employment and Workplace Relations in Australia 2017 is available for download in the top left download box.

SOME OF THE HIGHLIGHTS FROM THE GUIDE INCLUDE:

- Focus on global mobility and expatriate employment and provides a list of contacts across our global employment team
- Updated chapters regarding union governance and the building and constructions sector
- Review of the key aspects of the Fair Work Act, including the National Employment Standards and the complex array of laws regulating enterprise bargaining and industrial disputes
- The Guide covers individual grievances against employers under the general protections provisions of the Fair Work Act, and deals extensively with termination of employment, discrimination, bullying and diversity
- There is also guidance on navigating areas such as employee privacy, superannuation, taxation, work health & safety and termination benefit limits for senior executives under the Corporations Act .
