

DIAGNOSTICS AND MEDICAL DEVICES

The diagnostics and medical devices industry is fast-moving and highly competitive. Businesses face a unique selection of challenges - not least promoting and fostering innovation to remain at the technological forefront of the sector, a complex and evolving regulatory picture, and in some areas, a highly litigious patent environment.

At the same time, industry players are seeking to improve the efficiency and sustainability of healthcare delivery, to achieve faster and more accurate testing, and to develop less-invasive methods in order to enhance the patient experience.

Known for premium legal advice and client service, our lawyers assist the world's leading life sciences companies in protecting and commercialising their intellectual property, in defending themselves against diagnostics and medical device patent enforcement actions, in navigating the regulatory environment and in driving value-enhancing transactions.

We provide strategic oversight on a global scale and combine deep technical and scientific knowledge to deliver innovative solutions and help clients achieve their specific legal and business needs.

Our award-winning team has significant expertise within the diagnostics and medical devices industry, and the majority of our intellectual property lawyers have scientific or engineering backgrounds.

ACCOLADES

"What sets the highly-recommended firm apart from competitors which focus largely on drug-based pharmaceuticals is the variety of cases under the life sciences umbrella in which its partners are involved. Diagnostics are a particular strength of the firm, for example with partner Sebastian Moore leading client Ariosa Diagnostics to a settlement with opponents Illumina and Sequenom."
