SAFETY LEADERSHIP SERIES: WHAT ARE WE TALKING ABOUT IF WE AREN'T TALKING ABOUT COVID

By Steve Bell, Nerida Jessup, Julie Marotta & Lucy Bochenek - 24 February 2022

Many employers are planning the transition to a post-pandemic workplace. In the first Safety Leadership Series webinar for 2022 we reflected on some of the non-Covid related issues employers will need to contend with in the coming year. In other words, how do we prepare for the new normal?

Our panel of experts reflected on some of the non-Covid related issues employers will need to contend with in the coming year, including managing safety in the hybrid office workplace and for changing workforces, looking at mental health and sexual harassment as a safety issue, and lessons learned from recent case law related to contractor management.

EMPLOYMENT AND IR BRIEFING SERIES: THE YEAR AHEAD

By Natalie Gaspar, Drew Pearson, Wendy Fauvel, Nerida Jessup, Brad Popple and Lucy Boyd - 17 February 2022

2022 is set to be another tumultuous year for Australian businesses. The ongoing pandemic and upcoming Federal Election, amongst many other things, will continue to rock the employment and industrial relations space.

Our first Employment & IR Briefing webinar for this year provided an overview of the key issues our clients need to be across for business. Partner Natalie Gaspar facilitated a panel of experts from our national Employment, Industrial Relations & Safety group as we unpacked Covid-19 and vaccinations; underpayments, compliance and the Fair Work Ombudsman; the 2022 Federal Election and the ALP and Coalition's employment policies; and Respect@Work, #MeToo and the evolving expectations of employees.

EMPLOYMENT AND IR BRIEFING SERIES: HYBRID WORKING IN 2022 AND BEYOND

By Drew Pearson, Anna Creegan and Dr John Hopkins (Swinburne University) - 30 November 2021

Findings from recent reports by Swinburne University and the Productivity Commission, along with our own Future of Work report, all point towards hybrid working as part of the new Australian workplace, providing a pull factor for prospective employees and being integral to the retention of key talent.

In this latest briefing, which was designed to help frame employers' thinking around hybrid working, our panel of experts explored employee sentiment for hybrid and blended working, and discussed some of the key elements of a successful work-from-home strategy.

EMPLOYMENT AND IR BRIEFING SERIES: MANDATING VACCINES AT WORK

By Wendy Fauvel, Mark Rigotti, Nicholas Ogilvie, Nerida Jessup and Alissa Anderson - 14 September 2021

Organisations across the globe are trying to motivate as many employees as possible to get the vaccine. Many are offering incentives while some are starting to mandate vaccines where many feel public health orders have stopped short – but at what cost?

In this webinar our panel of experts discussed the key issues that arise with this complex topic. What do employers need to consider in developing their approach? Will it be a lawful and reasonable direction for employers to mandate vaccinations? How are companies encouraging their employees to vaccinate? What do employers need to consider once they have decided their policy?

EMPLOYMENT AND IR BRIEFING SERIES: UNDERPAYMENTS AND 'WAGE THEFT' - LATEST DEVELOPMENTS AND INSIGHTS

By Anthony Wood, Anna Creegan, Wendy Fauvel and Rommo Pandit - 23 June 2021

Investigating and managing wage underpayments, is one of the biggest risk and governance issues right now, as many employers grapple with historical claims and the aggressive approach being adopted by the regulator, the Fair Work Ombudsman. Adding further heat to the issue is the pending commencement of state government 'wage theft' reforms. Our briefing session will provide practical guidance and insights for employers.

In this webinar series, the panel features partners Anthony Wood (Melbourne) and Anna Creegan (Perth), with Executive Counsel Wendy Fauvel (Brisbane) and Senior Associate Rommo Pandit (Sydney) as they discuss:

- What we are seeing in relation to underpayment issues, including self-reporting and our experience using external accounting firms to conduct compliance audits;
- Where does an employer start to understand whether it is potentially in breach of its pay and record keeping obligations?;
- The Fair Work Ombudsman's current priorities and how they are regulating underpayment claims;
- What do managers and directors need to do to manage the due diligence obligations under the Victorian wage theft laws, and what are the chances this will be expanded nationally.

SAFETY LEADERSHIP SERIES: SEXUAL HARASSMENT AND GENDERED VIOLENCE IN THE WORKPLACE

By Aaron Anderson, Nerida Jessup and Drew Pearson

In 2020, the AHRC Respect @ Work report called out sexual harassment as fundamentally a WHS issue, to which safety policy makers and regulators ought to take a greater education and compliance role. Following on from the release of that report, SafeWork Australia has released its 2021 guidance material on Preventing Workplace Sexual Harassment and we expect an increased focus on this issue from jurisdictional safety regulators.

Partners Aaron Anderson (Brisbane) and Drew Pearson (Sydney) and Special Counsel Nerida Jessup (Sydney) discussed the employment and WHS obligations employers need to be aware of to prevent sexual harassment and gendered violence in the workplace, as well as considerations and risks in employer intervention and response to incidents and complaints.

SAFETY LEADERSHIP SERIES: MENTAL HEALTH MATURITY PROJECT IN CONVERSATION WITH DR ALI BURSTON

By Anthony Longland and Anna Creegan - 18 November 2020

In our final Safety Leadership Series briefing for the year, we discussed workplace mental health and wellbeing, and what businesses can learn from recent research on mental health literacy.

Partner Anna Creegan hosted the session, in conversation with Dr Ali Burston (MAPS, PSIOPA), an AHPRA Endorsed Organisational Psychologist and the founder and Managing Director of Perth-based consulting firm, Metisphere.

During this session we discussed:

1. Dr Burston's research into managing mental health in the workplace;
2. trends and key findings on workplace mental health, including how it is changing over time and across industries; and
3. managing mental health as a safety issue and strategies for organisational improvement.

ABOUT THE MENTAL HEALTH LITERACY PROJECT

The Mental Health Literacy Project (Project) is the first of its kind in Australia. The Project measures knowledge of key psychosocial terms to assist in managing psychosocial hazards and risk factors in the workplace, including the implementation of appropriate controls and strategies for individual, team and organisational improvement.

The Project fits in with broader mental health strategies and reflects new guidelines in the DMIRS Code of Practice and broader FIFO mental health recommendations.

The Project methodology allows for the development and progress of individuals across the continuum of mental health: from mitigating illness, to preventing harm, to helping people thrive.

NATIONAL INQUIRY INTO SEXUAL HARASSMENT IN AUSTRALIAN WORKPLACES

By Anthony Wood and Lucy Boyd - 4 June 2020

On 5 March 2020, the Australian Human Rights Commission released its fourth national survey on Sexual Harassment in Australian Workplaces. The report has wide-ranging implications for employers - from a policy perspective and what it means to the culture of the workplace.

In case you missed it, the Employment, IR and Safety team hosted a special webinar briefing session on the key findings of the report, and how employers can be on the front foot to address these issues.

During the session, our expert panel offered their insights on:

- The key findings of the report;
- what legislative and institutional reforms we might expect;
- practical implications on issues such as the use of non-disclosure agreements; and
- evolving to a best practice workplace culture.

The webinar panel discussion was led by partner Anthony Wood and included our guest panellists:

- Heather Price, Chief Executive Officer from Symmetra;
- Tamsin Lawrence, Deputy Director - Workplace Relations from the Australian Chamber of Commerce and Industry (ACCI);
- Catherine Dixon, Executive Director of the Victorian Human Rights and Equal Opportunity Commission; and
- HSF Senior Associate, Lucy Boyd.
